This is one in a series of articles about prominent British and Irish field-bryologists of the past. The author would be very pleased to learn of any information which supplements its content.

A Social and Biographical History of British and Irish Field-bryologists is also available on-line at <http://britishbryologicalsociety.org.uk/>

Bryological career

Weyman found the mosses Hamatocaulis vernicosus and Blindia acuta on Titterstone Clee Hill late in the 19th century. Weyman, though, is remembered more for his discovery of the rare aquatic moss Cinclidotus riparius, new to Britain in the River Teme at Ludlow, where it grows to this day in some abundance. Weyman first found his moss in 1891, and described it in the Journal of Botany that year. C. riparius differs from C. fontinaloides in being tinged black, but is otherwise very similar to its congener - so similar, indeed, that for a long time C. riparius was reduced to varietal status. A note accompanying the specimen formerly at Shrewsbury Museum (now at Ludlow Museum) indicates that H.N. Dixon (the leading British muscologist in the early 20th century) was not convinced that C. riparius was sufficiently distinct from C. fontinaloides to merit specific status. This view prevailed until 1998, when it was realised that the two species can after all be distinguished by differences in thin sections of the leaf margins and a few other subtle differences, whereupon C. riparius was reinstated as a species, so enabling Weyman to rest easy in his grave. Weyman, though, was no one-moss wonder, for he is also credited with first discovering the rare Bryum weigeli on the Long Mynd in 1893.

Weyman was a founding member of the Moss Exchange Club in 1896, and remained a member until 1908.

Ludlow Museum and Resource Centre holds specimens that he acquired and preserved on microscope slides. Weyman acquired some of these specimens from other naturalists – William Phillips Hamilton, Richard de Gylpyn Benson, Reverend Thomas Salwey, Reverend Augustin Ley, John Whitehead, Robert Braithwaite, and William Edward Nicholson. His herbarium is not known.

Family background and biography

Arthur William Weyman was born in Ludlow on July 13th 1860, the fourth of five children born to Thomas Weyman (1819-1873), solicitor, and Mary Maria (née Bluck, 1827-1901), youngest child of Samuel Bluck (1781-1866), a farmer of 422 acres in 1861, and Sarah (née Bowen, 1783-1861).

Thomas Weyman was a son of Thomas Weyman (1792-1859), farmer of 410 acres at Berrington Court and Purslow Hall, Purslow, Shropshire, and his first wife Ann (née Pitt, died 1840). Thomas Weyman senior was a son of William Weyman (1760-1839) of Stockton and Boraston, Herefordshire.

Arthur William's four siblings were: Henry Thomas (1850-1941), Maria (born and died in 1852), Stanley John (1855-1928), and Louisa (born 1863). Henry Weyman followed his father into practice as a solicitor in Ludlow, and wrote Ludlow in Bygone Days (1913), and other works. He was also sometime mayor of Ludlow. Stanley John and Arthur William also qualified in law, but Stanley's nature drove him to become a writer, and he achieved considerable fame as an author of many popular historical novels (see Dictionary of National Biography). His first novel was The House of the Wolf (1890), followed by many more including Under the Red Robe (1894), the Castle Inn (1898), Count Hannibal (1901), The Long Night (1903), and considerably later The Great House (1919) and Ovington's Bank (1922), among others.

Arthur qualified as a solicitor in 1883, and joined the family firm to practice in Ludlow. In 1888 he married Emma Seward Wood (1860-1925), daughter of the Reverend Horace Seward Wood (1826/7-1885) and Sarah Catherine (née Hemsley 1833), daughter of Edward Hemsley, solicitor. Horace Wood was a son of the Reverend Benjamin Wood (1791/2-1857), perpetual curate of Haveringland, Norfolk from 1823 until his death.

Arthur and Emma had two children: Arthur (1889-1969) who became a major and then lieutenant-colonel in the army, and Winifred Seward (1892-1967). The family lived in Mill Street, Ludlow in 1891, and subsequently at 54 Broad Street, Ludlow.

Winifred did not marry, and lived and died in Ludlow. Major Arthur Weyman, M.C., of The Royal Leicestershire Regiment married Joyce Annette Pack-Beresford (1900-1977) in 1922. Joyce was a daughter of Reynell James Pack-Beresford (1872-1949) of Woburn House, Millisle, Co. Down (and also of Athlone, Co. Westmeath), who bred pedigree livestock, and Florence (née Leith, 1875-1953). Reynell's brother Denis Robert Pack-Beresford (1864-1942) was a keen natural historian. The Pack-Beresfords descended from Major General Sir Denis Pack (c.1772-1823), K.C.B. (see Dictionary of National Biography) and Lady Elizabeth Louisa Beresford (1783-1856), fourth daughter of George de la Poer Beresford, 1st Marquess of Waterford. Reynell James Pack-Beresford descended on his mother's side from Lady Charlotte Bourke (died 1806), daughter of the Most Reverend Joseph Deane Bourke (died 1794), 3rd Earl of Mayo.

Arthur William Weyman died on December 26th 1935. His gravestone (which also mentions Emma and Winifred) is in the cemetery at Ludlow.
